According to the report published by Gartner in 2018, CAD market revenues will decline from $23.3 billion in 2017 to $22.3 billion in 2018, a year-over-year decline of 0.8%. This is due to the fact that growth is being driven by design professionals in the automotive sector and CPG market, instead of design professionals outside the automotive sector. Market revenues will return to pre-recessionary levels in 2022, reaching $23.3 billion, according to Gartner's forecast. By 2025, almost 3.3 billion people will have basic literacy, according to the International Adult Literacy Survey. The report was launched by UNESCO at the session entitled "Human Domain, Human Future" in Abu Dhabi. "There is now a global literacy challenge that is multidisciplinary, involving the social, the technological, the political, and the environmental factors," UNESCO Director-General Audrey Azoulay said in her keynote speech at the UNESCO Annual General Conference. She said that the World Humanitarian Day 2019 is dedicated to such a challenge, where the role of education and technology is highlighted. "We need to go beyond the framework of education to a more integrated approach that embraces all dimensions of the humanitarian challenge, including economic, social and political," she added. According to Azoulay, there are "a number of things that can be done to assist people in their efforts to educate themselves and promote their children's education. "But there is a big gap between the need for education and the accessibility of education," she added

I have a file with N lines, I want to see the line with the highest line number. I have a way to do this using tail, however the code has to be in python. I have tried to google and search on stackoverflow, but haven't found any good resources. I have tried the following: with open('file.txt', 'r') as f: lines = f.readlines() line = lines[-1] return line This gives me the last line in the file. The following code gives me the output that I want, but I'm not sure how to make the following code into a pythonic solution: highest = None lines = open('file.txt').readlines() for line in lines: if highest is None or line.count(' ') > highest.count(' '): highest = line A: If you just want to pick the last line, you can use the readline() method: with open('file.txt', 'r') as f: last_line = f.readline() You can skip the line.count(' ') > highest.count(' ') loop by using a slice: highest = None lines = open('file.txt').readlines()[:-1] for line in lines:

Often we are the ones running. We run our companies, run our projects and generally put in a lot of hard work to make sure our lives are as busy as possible. But that doesn't mean we are immune from attacks. Security is a never-ending battle. But at least we can count on one thing when it comes to keeping our systems safe: It's a run thing. This was the central message of the Xeros/WISE 2018 conference, held in London. It was organised by network security specialists Arbor Networks and technology research company Arbor Research Labs. Xeros is a boot and ISO (live image) CD system that can be run without the need for a hard drive. While this means you don't have a backup of your operating system in the event of a catastrophic failure, it means you can run your systems without interfering with the on-going operation of your day to day business. The ISO system used for Xeros is called WISE (for "Wi-Fi Secure Image System") and it is based on the open source Linux operating system. WISE includes an application, which is a friendly way of talking to the WISE device (Xeros itself) and the root file system on the device. The conference was the largest gathering of security professionals in the industry, with more than 700 attendees. Speakers covered a wide range of topics from using security tools to mitigate against wireless attacks to establishing common good security practices. Briefings Security is just as important for networks as it is for individual computers
