Paleo-era foodways, community structure, and crisis: a multi-disciplinary approach to examining rural crisis in the Upper Rio Grande Valley of Texas, AD 400-700. This paper seeks to examine the Upper Rio Grande Valley of Texas as a case study to understand how oral cultures and social change manifested in the complex socio-political reality of the early Medieval period. The Upper Rio Grande Valley is a topographical region of arid lands in western Texas, where the study will follow a long-established region that has historically been under-researched due to the dry conditions and sparse population. The broad, overarching goal of the project is to examine how and why an oral culture persisted in an ever-changing political and social climate and to articulate how social change is represented in the oral sources. Field of the Invention This invention pertains to the art of methods and apparatuses regarding soil compaction, and more specifically to methods and apparatuses used to compact soil when preparing a trench. 2. Description of the Prior Art The prior art consists of a myriad of apparatuses and methods for compacting soil as it is being formed into a trench and related products. The prior art deals with these methods and apparatuses as follows. The prior art generally provides for a pre-compact stage where the soil is generally treated in some manner to form an aggregate, and then compacted once the aggregate is formed. There are two types of pre-compactors. The first type is a drum with forced air. The second type is a rotating drum with a plurality of blades to force the soil down and into the rotating drum. Drum compactor devices are primarily used to reduce loads on large cross-cuts and trench walls and create a stronger, denser fill. Drum compaction can be used for both conventional and borings, but it is most commonly used in the latter case. The drum compactor device of the prior art is generally placed at the front of a trench. The drum compactor device provides a means of substantially reducing, if not totally eliminating, backfill segregation in trench walls and cross-cuts. In this way, backfill segregation is reduced or eliminated, which means that (1) the trench wall and cross-cut are less likely to blow out, (2) the trench wall is less likely to cave in, and (3) the trench wall is less likely to vibrate. During the drum compaction stage of the prior art, it is common for the sidewalls of a trench to buckle. This is especially true when the trench is of a shorter length, for example when a worker is only compacting a section of the trench, such as a trench measuring 3 meters in length. Drum compactors are often mounted to the excavator. They are attached to the boom and generally pushed or pulled into the trench. One example is shown in U.S. b7e8fdf5c8
