Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a continuous scan type solid-state image sensing apparatus which has a plurality of photosensitive cells arranged in a line. 2.

Description of the Prior Art Various types of solid-state image sensing apparatuses have been proposed, and, in particular, a variety of proposals for a continuous scan type solid-state image sensing apparatus have been made. Among the solid-state image sensing apparatuses, there is one in which a plurality of photosensitive elements are juxtaposed in an array, and a light reflected from a subject is received by the photosensitive elements to sense an image of the subject. With the solid-state image sensing apparatus of this type, the plurality of photosensitive elements are arranged in a line and a continuous process is effected from a first photosensitive element to a last photosensitive element. Such apparatus is hereinafter referred to as a continuous scan type solid-state image sensing apparatus. In case of driving and sampling a solid-state image sensing apparatus of this type, a driving power source, a predetermined source voltage $V_{sub.CC}$ (for instance, 5 volt) and a reference potential source $V_{sub.REF}$ (for instance, -11 volt) are applied to a plurality of photosensitive elements arranged in a line. When the source voltage $V_{sub.CC}$ is applied to the photosensitive elements, sampling pulses are applied to the respective photosensitive elements in accordance with time intervals of the source voltage $V_{sub.CC}$ so as to read out the signal charges stored in the photosensitive elements.
